Stark Choice

Indian refiners have been seeking barrels from far and wide. But the bulk of their imports over the past six months has still come from the world's large producers. Russia, Saudi Arabia and the UAE accounted for two-thirds of India's crude imports during March-August. Saudi supplies, which made up about 9% of India's imports, were disrupted by drone attacks on a crucial pipeline last week.

If India and other buyers were to scramble for replacement barrels at the same time, oil prices could rise sharply, executives said. Brent futures are currently around $105 a barrel. Finding vessels could also be a major challenge amid record-high tanker freight rates, they said.

India faced a similar choice when the US imposed a 25% tariff on Russian oil purchases in August 2025. But the choice is starker now: Gulf supplies, which were normal then, have been disrupted since the West Asia conflict began at the end of February.

India chose to bear the cost of the tariff rather than cut Russian imports. Imports rose for three months after the duty was imposed, peaking at 1.8 million barrels a day in November 2025.

They began falling in December as US-India discussions on removing the tariff took shape, reaching 1 million barrels a day by February, when it was finally lifted.

The US said India had agreed to halt Russian crude purchases as the reason for lifting the tariff. India, however, never publicly accepted that it had made such a commitment.

Some industry executives are of the view that Trump may not rush to impose the new tariff. Further disruption to the oil market could push up fuel prices ahead of the US midterm elections and add to inflationary pressures. Diesel prices are already at a record high and the Federal Reserve raised interest rates Wednesday to tame inflation.

The global crude market has become more fragile in recent days with Saudi supplies grinding to a halt and the US blockade of Iranian exports having further slashed available barrels.

Any further curtailment of Russian supplies, especially when global inventories are already depleted, could put significant upward pressure on oil prices.

World Bank Private Capital Mobilisation Up 60% in FY26

The World Bank announced Thursday that it had mobilised a record $112 billion in private capital for developing countries last financial year, with its chief lauding the approach as "adding another arrow to the quiver" of the world's largest development lender.

Private capital mobilisation increased by more than 60% from the year before and was almost level with the World Bank Group's own lending, according to official data.

Group president Ajay Banga said the focus on private capital mobilisation reflected a stark reality: donors did not have the funds to meet the world's development needs. "We can't be lending $200 billion a year. We don't have it," he said, adding that private capital was "augmenting" the Bank's work, not replacing it.

The only way to increase the Bank's own lending, he said, would be to ask countries to increase their contributions—but in a world with debt-to-GDP levels at sky-high levels, that is unlikely.

"Governments don't have that kind of fiscal headroom today," he said.

- 'CAN'T FORCE COUNTRIES' -

The World Bank normally offers low-interest loans and some grants to member countries through a combination of two of its arms, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) and the International Development Association (IDA).

Banga argued that IBRD and IDA lending simply "cannot grow adequately."

Still, the Bank's private capital mobilization strategy is not indiscriminate, and funds and projects are offered in combinations that suit member states.

"These things are not either/or, and they're also not mutually exclusive," he said. "One size doesn't fit all."

Critics of the use of private capital by multilateral development lenders argue that it can shift commercial risks from investors onto public finances, and that those finances in turn can subsidize private profits. — AFP
